

Railroads.

A Plumas man tells us the following about the railroad that runs from Reno up to Moran in Lassen county, but somehow it strikes us as a little over-drawn. "My wife got on the train at Reno with a boy baby in her arms about six months old. The baby went to sleep and she read awhile and then talked to an acquaintance in the next seat. Both remarked several times that the train ran exceedingly slow. By and by the conductor came along to collect tickets. My wife gave him hers but he said two could not ride on the same ticket and casually remarked that the boy must be more than twelve years old. "I suppose he is," replied my wife with a sad, homesick expression on her face. "We have been so long in coming, but he was only a baby when we left Reno and I carried him in my arms." You may not believe it but that conductor walked right on and never said another word about a ticket. —Oroville Register.

And this from Oroville, the town that never has a mail so long as the North wind blows, because the moss-backed teakettle which draws the alleged train on the California Northern can't climb a grade fifteen feet to the mile against it. They say that a drummer was riding over the line recently. He casually remarked as he smoothed the wrinkles out of his shirt, after having jammed it into the back of the conductor sitting in front of him, "the train seems to be running a little smoother than usual for the last few hours." "That is easily accounted for," said the conductor. "she skipped the rails at the Hockett, and has been running on the ties ever since."

The Nevada and California still carries the cow-catcher in front and is coming right along into the heart of Plumas, one of the best mining and agricultural counties in the State. If State county would display a little of the energy that the sagebrushers are showing, the travel and freight of Plumas would not all be going by Reno when the natural outlet is through Oroville. The California Northern has camped in Oroville for the last quarter of a century. Why not run it sixty miles into Plumas where you can dispose of your merchandises and get gold dust, beef, butter, etc., in return. Besides a couple of trains a day would pump enough pure mountain air into your town so that it would be possible for you to take your morning nip without the regular ten grains of quinine. You have been running the orange business into the ground for the last two years. If you show the same persistency and energy in advocating a railroad up the Feather that you have in citrus fruits, the road will be built. —Plumas National.

SANTA CATALINA

The Island to Which Senator Fair Would Consign the Apaches

The Call says the island of Santa Catalina, to which Senator Fair has suggested the transportation of the untamable Apaches, is represented as being a natural prison, too good for the proposed occupants. The island is eighteen miles long and from three to seven miles broad, nineteen miles from San Pedro on the mainland. In topography the island is rough and mountainous, one peak rising to the altitude of 2,110 feet. The shores are rocky and precipitous, especially on the southern coast. A growth of thorny bushes covers the whole island. It, however, possesses an abundance of water, and its climate is said to excel the soft balminess of the mainland. Formerly it was the home of the Indians. Since the days of civilization, however, it has been utilized for sheep and goat ranges. A few years ago 20,000 sheep and 10,000 goats found sustenance upon it. Vegetation partly owing to the abundance of water, keeps green all the year round. In some parts there are vast fields of wild oats. The waters about the island abound in fish, thousands of which can be seen swimming near the shore. The island is a portion of the James Lick estate, and negotiations were once commenced with a syndicate of English capitalists for its sale at the price of $2,000,000. Lead has been discovered upon the mountains and an attempt was made to develop the lead, but subsequently abandoned. A tunnel 1,000 feet long and a shaft 400 feet deep remain as relics of its mining era.

In the People of the State of California vs The Central Pacific Railroad Company, Justice Harlan delivered his opinion of the Court. These are what are known as the California railroad tax cases, and were brought to recover the county and State taxes claimed to be due by the railroad companies, which were assessed under Section 3,664 of the Political Code of California. The special grounds of the defense were that these were not State provisions, that the provisions of the Constitution and laws of California in respect to the assessment for taxation of property of railroads operated in more than one county are in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution as they require the assessment of the property at its full money value, and without making deductions for mortgages covering the property assessed that Section 2644 of the Political Code was not constitutionally enacted by the Legislature, and had not the force of law. The majority of the Court did not think that it was necessary to consider the constitutionality of the law by which the case was determined by the Court below, but affirmed the judgment entirely upon the ground that the assessment cannot be the basis of the judgment against the company.

Representative Morrow has received a monster petition from the Knights of Labor of California. It is over two thousand feet long and contains the names of over 50,000 persons. Every State county and municipal officer in California has signed this petition. Every male adult in many of the counties of the State has put his name to it. It prays for action on the part of Congress either by appropriate legislation or a change in the present treaty with China as may be necessary to forever prevent the further immigration of Chinese to the United States.

In the Senate yesterday Horace presented a memorial of the Republican Central Committee of Ohio charging that the election of Payne to be United States Senator was secured by bribery, fraud and corruption, and requesting that the Senate investigate the matter. It was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

GLADSTONE'S VIEWS ON AMERICA AND IRISH HOME RULE MATTERS.

America's Magnificent Future—The Irish Question Viewed in All Its Importance by the Statesman

N. Y. Mail and Express

"I am the only person that ever interviewed Gladstone." The speaker was a tall, handsome, military-looking gentleman, with a magnificent mustache and side whiskers. "How did it happen, Colonel? Tell me all about it," I said, full of curiosity, for I knew that the speaker was one of the best raconteurs in Europe. He had been twice around the world and had met the most famous persons of his time. Soldier, journalist and man of fashion, he was at home in the camp, at the club, in the drawing room—anywhere and everywhere. He had a personal acquaintance with King Humbert and had been granted several private interviews by Pope Leo XIII. He had smoked a chibouque with the Sultan and wandered amid the ruins of Athens with Dr. Schliemann. He had witnessed the barbaric splendor attending the coronation of the Czar, and as a boy had seen Washington Irving working in his garden at Sunnyside, wearing an old straw hat and clothes of rustic simplicity. He had visited Tennyson at Hazelmead and President Grant at the White House. We were sitting in a cozy corner of the Garrick Club in London, enjoying a little supper, after the theater, when he mentioned that he was the only man that had ever interviewed Gladstone.

"It happened in this way," he said. "Half a dozen of us were sitting in the office of the London Telegraph one afternoon, when the editor-in-chief said: 'I would give one hundred guineas for an interview with Gladstone.'"

"What is the difficulty?"

"The difficulty is that he positively declines to be interviewed—he will not be interviewed."

"I am an American," said the Colonel, "and interviewing originated in the United States. It is reduced to such an art there that men are frequently interviewed without knowing it."

"Well, that is the only way Gladstone can be interviewed, for if he supposed that you came for that purpose he would be as dumb as a fish, or more likely decline to see you altogether."

"All right, I will undertake to interview the Grand Old Man."

The Colonel then went on to say that the first thing he did was to call on the American Minister, with whom he was well acquainted, and got a letter of introduction to Mr. Gladstone. "Hearing that he always observed Sunday strictly as a day of rest from his official duties, I chose that day for my visit. I found him in his library, reading the Sermon on the Mount, for it should be remembered that the greatest and grandest of living Englishmen is a Christian, whose pure and simple life is an example for the so-called 'latter day' philosophers, who spend their lives in attempting to pull down the temple of God. Like all English gentlemen Mr. Gladstone is thoroughly well bred, and like all really great men, he is perfectly simple and natural in his manners. He bore his seventy-five years remarkably well. His voice was full, strong and rich, his hair, although white, was abundant, with little signs of baldness. A slight stoop in his shoulders was the only indication of advanced age that the Great Commander exhibited. In conversation with an American visitor, Mr. Gladstone would naturally speak of the United States, for which country he has a decided admiration. 'America has a magnificent future,' he said, 'if the American people are only true to their possibilities.' Before the close of the twentieth century, the vast continent embraced within the limits of the United States—stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Gulf of Mexico to the great lakes of the north—will be the home of 300,000,000 of freemen, representing every nation on earth, vast in extent and population (than the Roman Empire in its palmiest days, but free from the danger that attended the extension of that empire among barbarous peoples, which was the primary and potent cause of the decline and fall of the greatness of Rome. Every true Englishman should be proud of the progress of the United States, for the Americans are our kith and kin, and having the same literature, the same language and the same sturdy love of political independence. The wresting of Magna Charta from King John prepared the way for the title of Bunker Hill and the Declaration of Independence."

It is strange you have never visited the United States, that you might see the practical working of republican institutions, Mr. Gladstone.

"Nothing would give me more pleasure," was his reply, "but I have never been able to find the time. I have been in public life almost uninterruptedly since 1832, and for the last thirty-five years I have either been in office or one of the leaders of the opposition."

"When did you first enter office?"

"In 1832 as Chancellor of the Exchequer under the government of Lord Aberdeen. From that time Mr. Disraeli and I were constantly opposed to each other, though it was not until after the death of Lord Palmerston that I became the leader of the Liberals."

"It is rather singular that you began political life as a Tory and became the leader of the Liberals, Disraeli, who commenced as a decided Radical should turn out to be the most conservative of the Conservatives?"

"Yes, I was very young when I entered political life—too young to have convictions of my own upon the principles of the great parties that divided the public opinion of Great Britain. As I grew older, and studied and thought, my views became gradually more and more liberal, until I ended by becoming the leader of the Liberals."

"What do you regard as the most important question now agitating English politics?"

"The Irish question is not only the most important question now agitating English politics, but the most important question that any English Government has ever been called upon to deal with. For seven centuries the Irish people were treated as conquered, having no rights that the English thought they were bound to respect. The natural consequence of such a state of affairs was that many wrongs were committed whose evil effects are still felt. Centuries of injustice cannot be righted in a few years, even by the best intentioned Government. Ever since I entered public life, a more generous policy towards Ireland has prevailed, and all her just demands have been complied with, but no Government could live a day that dared to say Ireland, 'Go free.' Home rule will come, but absolute separation never. The British Empire must be maintained in its entirety. This is not a question of church, but of State. The Irish Church has been disestablished, and that of England may follow, but it would be without any political result. With few exceptions all Englishmen are loyal to the throne, and feel a personal pride in keeping up a splendid royal state. The Prince of Wales is as popular an heir apparent as England has had since famous Prince Hal of jocular memory, and no doubt will become a second Henry VI when he ascends the throne, without having an opportunity, however, to display that bravery on the battlefield which all English gentlemen possess for it is not customary in this age for King to lead armies."

"What do the Irish people really want?"

"The present cry is for home rule. Should that be conceded, the next demand will probably be for entire separation from England. The Irish have my sympathy, and I shall always be in favor of Ireland having all political rights consistent with the honor of the British Empire. The majority of the English people are not yet prepared to allow home rule to Ireland, but too time is fast approaching when it must be granted. The world moves and the governments move with it. What one age would regard as impossible becomes a matter of course in the next. The electric lights that now make the night as bright as day, were undreamed of a generation ago. You have in New York a bridge which surpasses all the seven wonders of the world, but before the next century dawns that magnificent structure will be regarded as quite an ordinary affair. So it is also in politics. I should be glad were the last act of my political career giving Ireland home rule. It is a right measure, and this is the right time for that act of justice to be done."

"It would be a crowning glory of a long and distinguished career."

"Yes, I would be quite willing to take my leave of political life forever could I see this measure accomplished. Ireland ceases to be a thorn in the side of England. When I retired from the leadership of the Liberals in 1874 I intended it to be permanent. The Irish complications had not arisen at that time. When the Conservatives were routed in 1880, I resumed my former position, and became Prime Minister again. It has been since 1880 that the affairs of Ireland have assumed so formidable a shape. The Irish question is a delicate one, and must be treated with patient sympathy. Ireland has no better friend than I am, but I cannot do what is impossible."

"I had often heard Gladstone speak in the House of Commons," continued the Colonel, lighting a cigar, after sipping his coffee, "but he never seemed grander more impressive, more truly the greatest of living Englishmen, than on that Sunday afternoon when, sitting in his own quiet library, he discussed the greatest questions of the age."

"How did he impress you from a personal point of view?"

"Well, he is tall, his eyes are blue, his hands large, his feet English, you know, his manner gentle, but dignified, and while absolutely free from affectation, he displays an ease and polish which we expect to find in an English gentleman of his political and social position. William Pitt Gladstone is not, like his great rival Disraeli, a dashing political acrobat, but he is a great statesman, possessing a genius capable of guiding his country successfully through one of the most critical periods of her history. When he leaves the scene where he has shone so long and so brilliantly, England will find it difficult to select from her public men one capable of taking the place of her present Prime Minister."

Democrats of this State are awaiting Fair's return, when there will be a boom in Nevada politics—Lyon County Times

Report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his response to the Senate resolution calling for the number of special agents in his office and their duties, says that if the increased force recommended in his annual report be granted, the entries suspended by his order of April 3, 1885, will be investigated and disposed of in about a year and a half. A large percentage of these entries, he thinks, is fraudulent. The proportion of new cases that will require such investigation will be much less than in those previous to April 3, 1885, since the order of suspension had the effect to materially check the making or completion of fraudulent entries. It was the ease with which frauds could be perpetrated under the existing laws and the immunity offered by the hasty issue of patents, he says, that encouraged the making of fictitious and fraudulent entries, yet the certainty of thorough investigation would restrain such practices. But great fraud must inevitably exist so long as the opportunity of fraud is preserved in the laws, and so long as it is hoped by the procurers and promoters of fraud that examinations may be impaired or suppressed. The Commissioner renewed his recommendation that the Pre-emption, Commuted, Homestead, Timber Culture, Timber Land and Desert Land laws be repealed, and says the questions broadly stated are whether the public lands shall be protected and an honest acquisition of title thereto insisted upon, or dishonest appropriation thereof allowed. These questions cannot long remain in abeyance with the present heedless rush of speculation and monopoly. The public domain will be absorbed in a period of time so brief that even the preventative against fraud and misappropriation may soon be too late to save any considerable portion of the public lands for homes of the people. The Commissioner closes his communication with a statement that his general information leads to the conclusion that no large amount of public land remains in the Western States and Territories, east of the cattle belt, which an actual settler can take up without buying off speculative claims or voiding some invalid entry by a contest proceeding, while within the cattle region it is notorious that actual settlements are generally prevented and made practically impossible, outside the proximity of towns, through the unlawful control of the country by cattle corporations. The demand for free lands for homes of American citizens, which is daily increasing in intensity, can no longer be met unless the unpatented lands now unlawfully held or claimed can be recovered to the public domain, and future illegal and fraudulent appropriations decisively stopped.

Second Volume of Grant's Book

The New York Times says: The second volume of Grant's autobiography, which was given to the public Monday morning, takes up the thread of the story where the first volume had dropped it in the middle of October, when he was on his way to take charge of the operations at Chattanooga in the place of General Rosecrans. Although concerned with events in its author's career far more familiar than those recorded in the first, the second volume will not be found less interesting, and, indeed, in the change of scene from the West to the East with new opponents and new subordinates to discuss proves a safeguard against repetitions. The memoirs at the outset terminate abruptly with the end of the war, the concluding chapter making only incidental allusions to the last twenty years of Grant's public career.

A Boston Scandal.

Boston is excited over the discovery that Miss Ella M. Abbott, the leading soprano of the fashionable Arlington-street Congregational Church, who died a fortnight ago, was the victim of malpractice. During her illness she refused to name the physician who committed the act or the man who was accessory. There are two leading members of the church who paid Miss Abbott marked attention, and it is believed that one of them is responsible for her death.

BUSINESS COMMON SENSE.

From the Dry Goods Chronicle.

It does seem as if there was less business common sense brought to bear upon the problem of extending American trade to other countries than in any other matter in which this country is interested.

In developing the trade of our own great country, we know that quick and frequent communication is the first requisite, that the mails must be carried over the sparsely settled parts of the country regularly, even if the postage on many routes does pay the expense, that when one business centre "reaches out" for the business of a certain territory by furnishing quicker communication or lower rates, competing centres must do the same or lose the trade that trunk lines build up their respective terminals, and the great problem in trade is to get the business started your way, even if it costs something to do it, after which the natural increase may be relied on to reduce the percentage of cost and in time pay a profit.

Now, the foreign trade is governed by the same rules. Steam and electricity have made the world one vast market open to the manufacturers of all the world on equal terms but those which can reach it the quickest and most frequently will get the bulk of the trade. When a merchant sees a competitor getting the best of him he finds out where his competitor's facilities are superior to his own, and meets them with equal improvements, but the Government of the United States refuses to sustain its steamship lines to even the extent which third and fourth class nations sustain theirs, and while expending millions of dollars on mail routes on land which do not pay expenses, refuses to apply the same principle to commerce on the sea. Private citizens have patriotically endeavored to restore the American flag to the proud place it once occupied on the ocean, but have gone down before the competition of foreigners who were backed by their Governments. Even now such efforts are being made, notably by the American line to South America but it seems to meet with but little encouragement from the United States Government and it is not improbable that it will go down as its predecessors have done before the unequal competition of foreign lines that are sustained by adequate pay for carrying the mails. If it does it will be a long time before another set of men sufficiently patriotic and enterprising will be found to again put capital and effort into establishing American steamship lines.

The Georgia Campaign

An Atlanta correspondent of the New York Tribune says that the coming campaign in Georgia threatens to be very bitter. The press of the State are almost a unit against General Gordon, and his maneuver in dragging Davis from obscurity has not been so much of a success as was anticipated.

The Supreme Court has issued the judgment of the United States Circuit Court for California and the Supreme Court of California in the cases of Wo Lee vs the Sheriff of San Francisco and Gio Wo vs the same. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the California courts in the California railroad tax cases. Justice Field concurred in a separate opinion.

Early yesterday morning James Sullivan shot and killed E. A. McWorthy, on the corner of Dupont and Sutter streets, San Francisco. The murder was a termination between the men, of a quarrel about two women. McWorthy was about 37 years of age and a gambler by profession. Sullivan was arrested and charged with murder.

The President sent the following nomination to the Senate yesterday: Clarence Ridgely Greenhouse, of California, to be Consul General at Kaniagawa, the nomination of Warren Green for that position having been withdrawn.

AN IMPENDING CALAMITY.—Should President Cleveland marry Miss Folsom, the result will probably be an expense to the people of the United States of $200,000 to $300,000. She is twenty-two years of age, and very probably will be a "President's widow" from forty to seventy years, drawing a pension of $5,000 per annum, as the woman who married President Tyler forty-three years ago is still doing.—Portland Oregonian

THE GREAT LAUGHING EVENT TO-NIGHT AT THE NEVADA THEATER.—All lovers of a hearty laugh and all who do not wish to miss the greatest treat in amusements that has occurred here for years will turn out to-night to witness Harrison and Gourlay in the celebrated play of "Skipped by the Light of the Moon." The New York Times says of it:

Harrison and Gourlay's screaming farce-comedy, "Skipped by the Light of the Moon," can lay claim to the longest and most successful run of all the funny plays produced in this city for the past two seasons.

The strangest, quaintest, oddest, drollest, queerest, funniest, most ludicrous characters, scenes, situations, saying and doings that the human mind has ever conceived are embodied in this play. Humor of the most unctuous, rollicking, jovial, side-splitting character that the most fertile imagination can picture is its distinguishing feature. Such laughter as it evokes has never before been heard within the walls of any theater in this city.

ON DECK AGAIN.—The Enterprise says:

Captain Harry Trewella, who was so severely injured nine weeks ago by the explosion of a blast in the upper workings of the Hale and Norcross mine, was about town again yesterday. He says he was excellently treated at the County Hospital and his good condition shows it. His face is somewhat scarred and peppered with powder marks, but his natural beauty is not spoiled. The ends of his dark brown whiskers, however, are changed to a bright yellow, which rings around his lower jaw from ear to ear, like the silken fringe of an Easter or Christmas card. It was at first thought he would lose one or both eyes, but he comes out all right in that respect, and the old pioneer is only too happy to be on deck and ready to go to work again. He has the congratulations of numerous friends.

ARTESIAN WATER.

A Good Flow Struck on the Helstein Ranch.

The Carson Appeal of Sunday says: Day before yesterday a fine flow of artesian water was struck on the writer's ranch at a point about a half mile west of Shaw's Springs. The strike was made by McLaughlin & Hawkins' well boring machine, and encountered at a depth of 70 feet from the surface. At the time of the strike the pipe was six feet above the ground and the water flowed over it. A pipe was inserted in the side of the main pipe and the whole driven down so that the spout was about two feet above the ground. Since that time it has continued to flow steadily at the rate of about three gallons per minor over 4,000 gallons in the 24 hours. The water is as clear as crystal and considerably above the present temperature of city water. Half a mile to the west on Schulz's ranch there are five flowing wells bringing the water from a depth of fifty and sixty feet. The flow comes from the mountains west of the city and runs along under the flat from west to east. Schulz's first flow was struck last Fall and has flowed unremittingly ever since, filling a large fish pond and overflowing it. The sinking of four additional wells did not diminish the flow of the first struck. The machine used by McLaughlin & Hawkins is what is known as the Ohio Well Borer, and the seventy feet was sunk and piped by working the machine in the aggregate not over 20 hours.

Clarence King in his report on the geology of Nevada called attention to the fact that artesian wells could be secured at almost any point in the Carson and Eagle valleys, as the geological formations rendered success certain.

Other geologists have held to the theory of underground rivers in this State, whose sources of supply were in the mountains, and these rivers, when tapped with a tube, will send a stream as high as the original source of supply.

With a few of these wells the farmer can laugh at drought, and be independent of the water companies.

THE LITTLE GIANT FENCE MACHINE FOR MAKING THE UNIVERSAL COMBINATION FENCE—DAVID YOUNG, PATENTER.

—Young and Jennings have just received one of those machines for which they have purchased the sole right to manufacture and sell this now universally known and guaranteed to be the best, most durable and portable fence ever manufactured, and peculiarly and especially adapted to fill a long felt want. This fence is needed and in time will be used by everyone that requires a fence, either around the house, garden or ranch. It is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain dogs and coyotes, having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use—hence it is inevitably the fence of the future. Wherever this fence has been introduced it has superseded all others. It stands without a rival, and why? Because it is portable. A half mile of this fence may be taken down and removed in a few hours. The material may be hauled and a large number of stacks fenced in a single day. Fields may be fenced for temporary pasturage to turn all kinds of stock, on short notice and but little labor. It is strong—it has been proven by actual test that it is six times stronger than barbed wire. It is durable—it will last three times as long as any other fence. It is hog proof, horse proof, coyote proof, rabbit proof. No fence hitherto tried, except this, will keep sheep in and dogs and coyotes out. It is cheap—in Ohio, Illinois, Missouri and other States where it has been introduced and extensively used it is declared to be from 30 to 40 per cent. cheaper than any other fence, and taking into consideration its durability, at least 50 per cent. cheaper. We can refer you to thousands who have used it—this is their testimony. We will be pleased to furnish, upon application, any information desired, and we think that we can demonstrate that our fence is all that we claim for it. It is the fence.

Apply to Young & Jennings, at the office of Studebaker and Carriage Agency, corner of Virginia and Second streets, Reno, Nevada.
